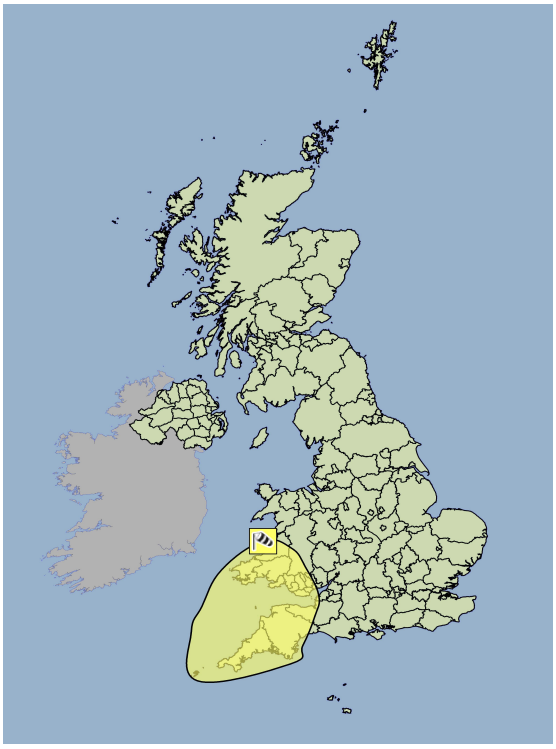
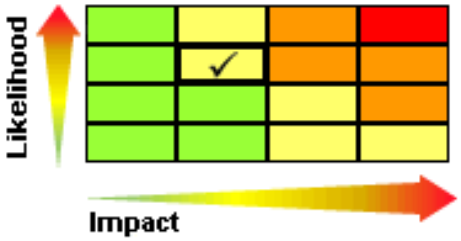
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A small, but vigorous area of low pressure will move south down the Irish Sea to affect southwestern parts of England and Wales. Strong winds will develop along the southern flank of the depression. The strongest winds are expected to be along coasts exposed to the northwest, over high ground and also near heavy showers. The showers will be a wintry mix of rain, sleet and snow; snow primarily over higher ground, where some slight accumulations are likely, but temporarily at low-levels.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Wind

Valid from 22:00 on Thu, 29th Jan 2015 until 07:00 on Fri, 30th Jan 2015

Strong northwesterly winds are expected to develop across parts of South Wales and southwest England this evening, persisting overnight, before gradually easing tomorrow morning. Inland gusts are likely to widely reach 50-60 mph, with 70 mph possible along exposed coasts and over high ground.
The public should be aware of the possibility of disruption to travel, with difficult driving conditions, particularly for high-sided vehicles.
